Rice has a finer flavor if washed in hot water instead of cold before cooking.

Chloride of lime will rid any house of vermin, as they have a horror of the odor.

Grease and oil on carpets can be easily removed by applications of fuller's earth.

A delicious stuffing for roast pig or boned fresh ham is made of celery and apples.

Salt put into the bottom of water bottles, vinegar cruets and the like will remove old stains.

In washing china, take care that soda water is never used with a pattern on which gilt appears.

In cleaning upholstered furniture place a wet cloth over the pieces and beat, cleaning the cloth several times.

Stains may be removed from tinware by scouring with common soda, then washing thoroughly and drying.

Old flour bags or sacks turned wrong side out make excellent receptacles for furs, etc., during the summer months. No moths can possibly penetrate.

When trying to get your curtain rod through net curtains and it's bound to catch, just try slipping your thumb on over end of rod. It works like a charm.

Hot water bottles should be blown full of air and stoppers screwed in tightly when they are not in use, says the New York Press. This prevents the sides sticking together.

The 'Nerves' Bugaboo.

"He is probably a nervous and high strung child," I suggested, referring to a youngster who had just had a tantrum and been sent out of the room.

I had hoped by this tactful explanation to soothe his father's displeasure, but strangely enough, my remark seemed to produce just the opposite effect. Across the father's face passed a thunder cloud of disapproval. "He is NOT," he affirmed vigorously, "and what is more, he isn't going to be told that he is. I am glad he didn't hear you say that. My wife said it once in his presence, but only once. I let her have her way about a good many things, but that's one matter in which I'm firm as Gibraltar. I will not have that child get the idea that he is nervous and high strung, and that is an excuse for all kinds of naughtiness." "You seem to feel quite warmly on that subject," said I. He laughed. "Well, I think I have reason to," he said ruefully, "I lived in a family once where this talk of nerves went on all the time. The whole family had them except the father, and how I did pity that poor man, for his women folks didn't do much else except have nerves and talk about having them. His wife had nervous indigestion and one of the daughters had hysterical spells and another had all kinds of nervous feelings, sometimes she'd think she couldn't swallow and then again her eyelids would twitch and all that sort of thing, and when I came away the youngest girl was just about to have St. Vitus' dance. Of course, they weren't a very strong family anyway, but I think a good deal of the trouble was simply that they all heard nerves talked so much that they had to have them. If I hadn't gotten out when I did, I think I might have had them myself. I can tell you my children aren't going to hear the word 'nerves' spoken if I can help it."

I wonder if my friend is going to succeed in carrying out his theory. If he does, I congratulate him and his progeny just as heartily as I know how.

What one of us doesn't know families like the one which he described—families in which "Nerves," with a capital N, are made a Moloch. The children hear their mother tell with pride how nervous and high strung they are, and they naturally think of nerves as something to be proud of and nourished, instead of as a cause for shame, like bad teeth, indigestion, or any other indication that we have transgressed the great laws of health.

Perhaps the children are none too strong to start with, and by-and-by, from having dwelt on the thought of nerves and nourished all the symptoms they or their parents have been able to find in themselves, they come to actually suffer from the great American malady. Whereas, if these children had never heard the word "nerves" spoken, had never heard "highstrungness" and "spitfire" deified, they might have gradually grown away from any inherited tendency towards the neurotic temperament.

Now, please do not misunderstand me. I am not denying that many people actually are afflicted with nervous diseases and can't help it any more than people sick with organic troubles. I am not denying that much of the crossness and unlovableness, the blueness and discouragement in the world is due to diseased nerves, and can be cured only by building up a healthy body with healthy nerve centers.

But I do think that nervousness is sometimes used as a pleasant synonym for "cussedness." As Dora Melagari says, "In my youth, nervousness was usually called plain bad temper."

And furthermore, I believe that a great deal of unnecessary nervousness is stimulated and developed by allowing children to get the nerve thought, to hear nerves constantly talked about, not as a disease to be ashamed of, as we really ought to be ashamed of all disease, but as an interesting peculiarity to be paraded and exploited.—Exchange.

GOV. MEAD LAUDS VERMONT

their very infancy and they hear nothing else from their fathers. Public speakers and the press may occasionally criticize the acts and sayings of the people, but the state itself, as they feel, above criticism. The sons and daughters of Vermont also realize they have no copyright entitling them to a monopoly of this spirit of loyalty. Massachusetts has her Pilgrims, her Plymouth Rock, her Bunker Hill and her Paul Revere; her commodious harbors and her greater Boston. She also has her sacred codfish and in short, many, many places of historic interest. But the sons and daughters of the green hills feel that the patriotism of loyal Vermonters springs from an early history without a parallel, from a wealth of natural products without an equal, from a location geographically not excelled. Our sons and daughters claim a parentage noble and heroic; with obstacles overcome; suffering endured; independence fought for and won. They are proud of the simple life their fathers lived, and all these things, tempered with a deeply religious faith, have built a race of men and women possessed of those qualities which tend to the highest development of human kind."

The governor then referred to the early history of the settlement of Vermont, and to the early contests for their rights which developed characteristics which for more than 100 years have marked the Vermonters.

He referred to the two great problems which confront the Vermont people and which are engaging their attention in a thoroughly industrial manner, namely, "conservation of all natural products of Vermont," and "the betterment of the people."

These two great problems forever go hand and hand. The first subject under "conservation," he considered was the agricultural life of Vermont. He regarded agriculture as the basis of the state's development, and growth and he felt this subject should have special attention. He next considered the "conservation of Vermont's natural products," particularly marble, slate, granite and asbestos, which he stated, considering their size, exceeded in wealth those of any other state in our Union. Third, he referred to "the development of water power" which is being rapidly acquired and converted into electric force. He referred to one corporation with a capitalization of $14,000,000 whose power was displacing annually the use of 525,000 tons of coal. He said in Chittenden county alone there is being developed today over 10,000 horsepower, all of which is used in that county. In Rutland county one corporation is developing and using over 5000 horse power. He felt that there was a great saving to Vermont of many millions of tons of coal annually, and he made special mention of the fact that this water power was being developed and used for from 40 to 50 per cent of the cost of the same power obtained from other sources.

Fourth, he referred to the "deeper inland waterway" movement which is to utilize Lake Champlain the whole length of Vermont's western boundary. This will afford cheaper freight and bring her in close touch with the markets of the eastern and middle states. Also to the possibilities of the Connecticut river sometime being converted into "a deep waterway" affording another waterway on the eastern boundary which would inure greatly to the benefit of Vermont.

Fifth, he referred to "the conservation of her forests" and what was being done by Vermont and by the government of the state to preserve the forests, realizing fully the relation of the forest to the pure water, to her springs and to the beauty of her hills and in fact to her climate.

Referring to the "educational life of the state," the governor spoke of the tremendous advance which had been made during the last two years, not only by the legislature itself, but in the great work which is being done by the individual throughout the state. Under this head he also dwelt fully on the "religious development" of the people of Vermont, feeling that this was really a condition which could not be neglected.

Admitting that Vermont is not well known by the inhabitants of other states, the governor said the state has no large cities, no sea coast, no deep waterways and 48 per cent of her sons and daughters have left their homes among the green hills and have become residents of other states. He referred to the great possibilities which Vermont affords in her agricultural life, in the development of water power. All these he said should stimulate the love of her absent sons and daughters toward the old homes of their fathers. He said that Vermont and her people needed and hoped for the help of absent ones for their good and for the special benefit of posterity; for betterment along all vocations of life. He stated the sons and daughters of Vermont were rapidly returning; that they are building their beautiful homes upon her hillsides and in her valleys; that they are beautifying nature all over the state; that their good influence is being felt more and more and his wish was that this "home coming" would be increased more rapidly. He assured the Massachusetts sons and daughters of Vermont that they would ever find the latch strings of the old homes dangling from the outer doors and the fattened calves were ready for the sacrifice.
